It gives me pleasure to know that the International Journal of Physiotherapy is being published bimonthly since February 2014.

Scholarly journals are the windows that open our perspectives to the emerging knowledge and skills and provide a medium for learning. There is a consistent need for sharing the experiences and evidences that are generated as part of objective and scientific studies. The end beneficiary is always the society and this is the primary purpose of every aspect of healthcare delivery.

Physiotherapy is both an independent and complimentary therapeutic modality. It offers huge relief to patients not only for post-operative rehabilitation, but also for disease prevention and health promotion by propping up the appropriate lifestyle practices. There is a greater need to disseminate the research studies which Physiotherapy professionals have individually or collectively generated, so that the beneficence of these practices can become blessings for the humanity.

I congratulate the editorial board of International Journal of Physiotherapy for having taken up the noble cause of information dissemination. This journal is bimonthly, peer reviewed and opens access, so that a large number of professionals can access its benefits. It also adds credibility by publishing the genuine and original research work that is vetted by a team of peer reviewers of high repute. This journal is useful for students, teachers, practitioners, researchers as also for the policy makers.

I wish this journal a long and fruitful publication life-cycle.
